Not enough prep for bio and PAT

By bileen2

I just took my DAT last week. Thanks to the reader who suggested the Schaum's Outline for Bio. The bio review in Kaplan is really not sufficient if you want to get a top score. Get the Schaum's, know everything in it (in my DAT, there were only 1 or 2 bio questions that weren't covered in Schaum's), and you will get a great score in bio. Also, please note that at least one of the answers in the written practice test of the bio section is wrong and some of the questions are poorly worded.

The chemistry, organic and math sections of the real thing are easier than the Kaplan practice test, and the Kaplan review sections for these subjects should be sufficient.

The PAT of this (and of every test prep I've come across) is much easier than the real one I took. The tips they give you do help, but the examples they give are too easy on average. Find the hardest problems of the practice PAT test and figure that to be about the average level of difficulty for the real thing. Some of the angle ranking questions on the real thing are nearly impossible unless you can distinguish 1 degree of difference. I really messed up on this section because I finished with enough time on the practice test - but on the real thing, I mismanaged my time and basically had to guess the last 9 questions or so.

Here's how I did on the practice compared to real thing - Practice: Bio 18, Chem 18, Organic 23, PAT - 21, Reading - did not take, Math - 21. Real thing: Bio - 22, Chem - 29, Organic - 29, PAT - 17 (ouch!), Reading - 22, Math - 25, Academic Avg. - 25.

Hope this helps, and good luck.

Great Study Guide

By Estel Ryan

I used the Kaplan book to study for my DAT this summer and found it very useful to help focus and figure out what to study. I used it mainly to get an idea of what major topics to review and then turned to college textbooks for better detail. The Biology section is ok, but fairly weak. It will give you a great review of several important topics (cellular respiration, cellular reproduction, genetics, etc) but I felt it was weak in areas of plant biology, classification, ecology and invertebrate biology. I would recommend reviewing college textbooks for those areas, I'm pretty sure that's a lot of what I got wrong on the real test. The Chemistry and Organic sections are pretty strong and probably all you will need to review in those sections. I reviewed the quantitative reasoning in the book, but in retrospect I wish I had reviewed my old pre-calc book for a more in depth trig review. My DAT focused a lot on probability, trig, and rate/distance calculations. The perceptual ability section is a great introduction to the types of questions, but as far as difficulty, they are much easier than the actual test.

The two practice tests are an excellent addition to the book. I took the written one first. I felt it was easier to take the test on paper than on the computer, but still I found it worthwhile to introduce you to the type and range of questions to expect. The CD was very similar to the format of the real DAT. Familiarizing yourself to the computer format is essential. It is a much different testing environment when you can't write notes right on the page. Also, the science sections on the computer are far more difficult than the real exam, I would say review what you are getting wrong, but expect to score at least a couple points higher. My real

DAT scores were intermediate to the written and CD that came with this book.

For the sake of comparison, in biology i scored 22 on the written, 17 on the cd, and 20 on the real thing; chemistry: 19 written, 16 cd, 20 on the real thing; organic: 28 written, 18 cd, 24 on the real thing; total sci: 23 written, 17 cd, 21 on the real thing; reading: 19 written, 22 cd, 22 on the real thing; PAT: 18 written and cd, 16 on the real thing.

I basically "crammed" for the test, which was probably not the smartest thing to do. I would say use this book, take your time, study, and definitely study as much as you can for perceptual. Chances are if you are a strong pre-dental candidate, you already know most of the science information from college classes. This book will help you refresh what you already know and clear up some details that may have become a bit foggy. I plan to use this book again over the next few months and try to improve on my current scores.

OK study material

By EWA

For the practice, this Kaplan book is worth it.

The reviews for me were not specific enough. I studied my college text books before I took any practice test.

Basically, the written test is good for pointing out your weak areas to begin with. The Preparation booklet put out by the ADA is another written test and is actually closer to the level of difficulty you'll see on the real DAT.

The Kaplan science sections are harder than the real DAT, the reading and quantitative are about the same as the real DAT, and the perceptual ability is easier than the real DAT. I scored about 17 on the Kaplan total science and 23 on the real DAT. For perceptual ability, I scored about 20 for Kaplan and 18 for the real DAT.

So, basically, the book is worth the money for pointing out what you don't get right on the practice test. Also, the more practice you get for perceptual ability, the better. In addition to this Kaplan book, I recommend TopScore Pro practice test.
